Course Description

How has nationalism emerged as a major force in history? Why? What are the consequences of a global economy/nation for national belonging? This course examines the history of nationalism from the French Revolution to today. We will explore how nationalism, as a phenomenon, has forwarded the creation of sovereign nation-states, and we will look closely at how nationalism, as an ideology, has inspired fascist regimes, racist movements and policies, as well as ethnic cleansing and genocide. We will also investigate how questions of race, class, gender, and colonialism have influenced notions of national identity and consciousness. Classics of nationalism will be covered as well as more recent theories of the postmodern.
